I need service guides or takeapart instructions for Powershot S100, S110, S200, SD400, SD600, SD780, SD940, SD1000, SD1100, and SD1200. From other Powershot cameras I have seen and poked around with, the construction of others is very similar so even if youre wanting to do this with a different model, you may find my photos instructive. Just trying to save time and hope for someone else. Im still looking for a guide for the SX170. Whats happening We have quite a few PowerShot models already, and we get more every few months. About the only thing missing is optical image stabilization, but you can counteract hand shake by using the viewfinder. It also isnt great at higher ISO sensitivities, so lowlight photos without a flash arent the greatest. Still, given the cost, theyre hardly disappointing. At and below ISO 200, photos have great color and generally look sharp with good detail. At ISO 400, a sensitivity regularly used for shooting indoors without flash, photos get softerlooking, but noise and noise suppression are well balanced making 4x6 prints possible. There is a noticeable increase in noise at ISO 800 resulting in faint yellow blotches, and colors start getting slightly washed out. Theyre still pleasing enough for Web use at small sizes, though. However, everything that happens at ISO 800 increases at 1,600; use it for when you absolutely need to control motion blur and dont have a enough light or cant use the flash.Center sharpness is very good, and though it softens a touch as you move out, it was still remarkably consistent edge to edge and in the corners compared with other budget cameras Ive tested. Also, there was very little fringing in highcontrast areas of photos.Exposure is also very good. Highlights will blow out on occasion. The auto white balance indoors is a little warm, but otherwise its good and you can always take advantage of the presets or manual white balance if youre not happy with the results.Panning the camera will create judder thats typical of the video from most compact cameras, and youll notice motion trailing on fastmoving subjects. The zoom lens does not function while recording, but you do have a digital zoom; I suggest not using it as the results are not pleasant. The most control you get over settings is in Program mode, letting you select things like white balance, ISO, and

metering. <http://doggystylzgrooming.com/admin/photos/create-a-training-manual.xml>

Its also the only mode with access to the cameras My Color options like Vivid and Sepia, as well as a Custom option with adjustments for contrast, sharpness, and saturation. On the other hand, you have the new Live View Control mode, which enables you to adjust brightness, color, and tone with onscreen sliders and see what the photo will look like as you make the changes. An Easy mode works similarly, but it heavily limits settings. There's a new Discreet mode, too, that shuts off all sound and lights so you can shoot without accidentally disturbing the subject or those around you. Let's round them up.
